Culinary Critic

-Damn

Each week, our resident critic takes a look at the previous issue and lets you know just what you didn't miss...

I got the front page last week! Was it because it was really funny, or because the editors love me? No. "Well, we just didn't have space anywhere else...." Bastards. I never liked them or this stupid paper anyway. Last week's critic was okay. On the ad page, it said that Hell's Kitchen (Beats working at Gracies! They don't pay, though. Bastards.) was desperately seeking staff. In other words, these people have NO FRIENDS and NO LIVES. Still, it'd be nice if just a few people would come to play with us....

I'd have to say that our illustrator wasn't all that sharp last week. I don't know--I operate on a simple system: no pics of Mickey Mouse sodomizing the Little Mermaid, no soup for you. Just to show how sad our editors are, on the credits page, they spelled their friend Mark's name wrong and probably Scott's too. I was happy with the editorial. When the guy in question came up to me and asked what the purpose of this was, I said, "Ah, we like to write it and other people like to read it?" Thanks to Kelly for the justification. Oh, and that "Weenie Boy"cut was uncalled-for and not funny at all.

Now, for my favorite section, Martyr of the Week. NEWS BULLETIN: I found out that Troy won't get a hold of these issues until the end of the quarter. Totally coincidentally, here's a NOTICE OF TYPOGRAPHICAL ERROR: Troy's name was misspelled last week. It should have read, "Troy 'sex is just not sex without a staple remover' Liston." I don't know how we missed it when proofing.... Universe, Fay: yada yada.

The Melancholy Predator sported a real illustrator last week! Wow. And what a beautiful, beautiful typeface . . . can anyone say, "nine-pin dot matrix printer?" I confess that for the first time, I liked a poem in MP. Second Coming was good. The others were standard fare. Urban Legend was too lame and too long.

Highlights of last issue: that poem by Knapp, and the fact that I wasted an hour of my time on Cul Crit.

Desperately Seeking Staff

The Kitchen is open, and there's a help wanted sign on the door. Many of our staff members are still actively working, but some graduated and others moved on, and as we all know, long distance relationships are hard to keep. So Hell's Kitchen is currently seeking staff members to fill out the ranks of Gracies Dinnertime Theatre and the Melancholy Predator publications.

We're looking for writers, illustrators, poets, and people with a lot of funny ideas. If you'd like to join our first page collaborative efforts, any and all are welcome to attend staff meetings. Alternatively we accept submissions of all kinds.

We will print any submissions as long as the author can justify their existence. Come join us, and feel the power of the dark side.

Both publications may be reached via diablo@csh.rit.edu or handwritten submissions, photos, or messages may be sent to:
