THE ICONOCLAST

Hell's Kitchen is proud to introduce our newest member publication: the Iconoclast. Founded earlier this year, the Iconoclast is based on Rutgers (Camden campus), New Jersey. Producing several issues on their own, they recently opted to join our merry little federation. Since their founding the ambitious students have made their single page publication grow to four pages, and hope for more substantial growth in the future.

At a recent anti-defamation meeting regarding an article printed in the official news-mag of Rutgers, the Gleaner, Rutgers-Camden's journalism professor, Dr. Moffatt, previously an editor for the Philadelphia Inquirer, had this to say regarding the campus' rogue publication:

"This is garbage and I am personally offended."

Later he went on to concede that he thoroughly approves of their behavior.

Published monthly, the Iconoclast has proven itself on its home turf by welcoming deserters from the Gleaner onto its blossoming staff and winning the support of students, staff, and local businesses. We sincerely hope that the Iconoclast continues to flourish. Here's to combined efforts.

Hell's Kitchen

Hell's Kitchen (hĕls kĭch′ən). n. Hell's Kitchen is not, despite its contiguous-paper appearance, a single publication. Hell's Kitchen is a rapidly expanding federation of like-minded groups of students and alumni that want to express themselves. The primary purpose of Hell's Kitchen, in its role as a purveyor of information, is to expose ideas to a reading public clearly and interestingly. This task is completed by the individual publications within Hell's Kitchen in a variety of ways including poetry, illustrations, satire, prose, news, critiques, maps, diagrams, and even mail-in campaigns. Each separate publication group defines its own schedule, its own style, its own rules, but each group agrees to become part of the larger coalition known as Hell's Kitchen.

Member Publications:

- Gracies Dinnertime Theatre
- Melancholy Predator
- 10:1 Cereal Delusions(RIP)
- Cereal
- The Iconoclast

Cereal*, a publication dedicated to serialized fiction, is searching for contributors.
