Come support GDT at Fringe Fest this Saturday!

Yes, it's true...Gracies Dinnertime Theatre is a part of the ESL Rochester Fringe Festival. Come visit us and 29 other vendors at the Rochester Indie Book & Zine Fair (RIBZ) on Saturday, September 26th, from 11AM-4PM at the RIT City Art Space. There will be zines, comics, books, poetry, and more.

Is GDT a zine? No. Is GDT a comic or poetry? No, but we feature both weekly. Is GDT a book? Also no. But we have published two books, and will be selling one of them (the def-ə-'nish-ən-er-ē) on Saturday along with other merch.

We will also have our unique print-on-demand setup available, allowing you to pick issues of GDT for us to print on the spot. RIT's Fringe Fest shuttle will take you to the Little Theatre in Rochester on Saturday, 9:30AM-9:30PM, only a short walk away from RIBZ.

Mark your calendars!

Get Learnt

-by mighty_chondria

Hey hon, I told you last week we would look at a way to edit 3D prints once you went and got them from the Thingiverse. Well, this week's site is called TinkerCAD.com. CAD is "computer assisted design" and there's a fancy version of it that's made for engineers but it also uses some engineering language. TinkerCAD is made for elementary age kids to start learning software and moving in 3D on a flat screen,* but plenty of adults use it as a quick and easy way to make something they want to 3D-print. The site is free and it has lessons built in to learn each control. But where is the fun in that? Just start playing around. Chances are, if you've played a game where you rotate and zoom around an object, you'll already have a sense for the controls. For most DIY projects, it's good enough.

Whenever you make a new file the website gives it a two part name that's real fun, like flipping through a thesaurus.† One of the easiest tricks is making a negative, just a cut out of a shape. If you want to mix and match with commercial stuff, they've got all the standard hardware shapes in the pieces already, you add one positive sticking out and negative the other:‡ now you got two easy to connect pieces that both fit your library's printer. You can also extrude an Australia and that's just good fun.

If there is something that you found on Thingiverse that you like but want to modify, Tinkercad has an option to let you import stl, obj, or svg files. Be aware, though: there is a maximum file size of 25MB,§ so the detailed texture on your Settlers of Catan 3D tile might just be too detailed.

Play around and share. Make things. Stay in trouble. Cheers! ☑

See more examples on page 3.

* They've also got coding and electronics simulators.

There's hardware, software, and probably some goldilocksware in there.

† A quick look at my collection on TinkerCAD has gems like "Surprising Essboo," "Fantabulous Bombul-Jarv," and "Ingenious Waasa-Luulia."

‡ PEMDAS that thing right back to zero.

§ It resets if you fuse mods and start a daughter file. Then you don't have ten normie shapes, just one wonky one.

This printed shape is called a Nabraskus.

THINGS TO SAY WHEN CONFRONTED BY GDT "NEWSIES"

- "Where do you keep the rare satire?"
- "What is the worst onion you've ever eaten on campus?"
- "Tell your editor you love them soon."
- "Can I speak to the issues directly?"
- "Do you solicit?" (menacingly)
- "Do you accept dining dollars here?"
- "Call for Titty Cocker over discord."
- "I brought my own printer."
- "My dorm is rich and so big."
- "No hablo inglés."

No More Excuses!

-by Dedusmuln

Hey, newsie here. One of those guys that goes around in front of the library every Thursday morning in a strange humiliation ritual that involves saying things like “extra extra!” and “have you read the news,”* or “do you like banned books? We’re like those, sort of.” We will do anything to get people to take issues, and I mean anything,[†] but people still turn us down. I don’t understand why. When I run at people and shout “AM I THREATENING,” they say no, so it’s clearly not a problem on our end.

No, it is clearly a problem with the News-ees,[‡] as every Thursday I am supplied with all sorts of reasons why they can’t take an issue right now. Helpful as I am, I’ve come up with a list for fellow newsies to reference when dealing with those who might be resistant to our not-soliciting.

1. Is this soliciting? No, we aren’t trying to get anything from you. Why, should we be charging for these?
2. I have to go to class. It takes two seconds to take an issue, and we’re not going to make you sit down and read it in front of us.
3. I’ll come back later. We will not be here when your class is done (and also no you will not).
4. I can’t read. How did you get into RIT? It doesn’t matter, we at GDT are accepting of all literacy stati.[§] We have pretty pretty pictures for you to look at! Or you could find someone to read it to you.
5. Ew. Sounds like someone is jealous of my newsie aura.
6. No hablo inglés. We will teach all our newsies Spanish immediately, and can print you an issue in Spanish too.[¶]
7. Anglice non loquor. One, fuck you. Two, we will be teaching all our newsies every language ever.^{}
8. I’ll try to make it. Okay, we’re not an actual theater. Why do people think we’re an actual theater? I’ll have to take off my jester hat for this head scratcher.

It’s not an issue to not want to take an issue. If you’re not interested, just say no thanks and keep moving. If it hurt our feelings every time someone didn’t take an issue, we would all be in group therapy.^{††} I’m just saying you should be honest about it, or at least make up an excuse we haven’t heard yet.

* I don’t think we can really be classified as news, so add “straight up lying” to our list of jobs.

† I once dropped to my knees in front of a group of people and said “please,” and they took an issue. True story. I scraped both knees.↗

↗ Editor's note: we did not tell them to do this.

‡ Can I copyright this?

§ For example, I can’t spell.

¶ Editor's note: no we cannot. But we would sure like to! Submit something in Spanish today.

 Every learnable language. If you ask us to speak North Sentinelese you will find out how it feels to get papercuts on your eyes.

†† Idea for our next meeting?

RIT Weather Indexes

-by G.S.

Many mornings, I can't be bothered to check the weather before I go to class. Why would I? Even when I do, I have to trust the Henrietta daily weather forecast and am caught off guard by RIT's uniquely hot-and-cold weather. But what if there was a better way? I've come up with some brand new, totally reliable indexes for indirectly measuring the weather on campus.

Average Walking Speed (AWS): fast means it's too cold out, and students are speedwalking to get out of the cold and snow. Medium means it's nice out. Slow means it's too hot and students are sluggish due to extreme heat or humidity. There may be occasional outliers in either direction due to strong winds. A "medium" walking speed is 3.0-4.0mph.

Fish Out of Bowl ("Fish"): the number of students sitting on the Fishbowl's (Center for Student Innovation) slanted lawn. This is a more reliable index compared to the number of bikes, number of tote bags, or humancytometer indexes used to perform human viability assays of campus. If the number is negative, students are fleeing.

Gleason's Sign (GLE): the percentage ratio of students waiting inside vs. outside of the Gleason Circle bus stop. Higher when it's cold or raining. Not that it's much warmer inside, honestly.

Slip and Slide (SnS): how slippery it is outside due to mud, rain, hail, or ice. Measured similar to the Air Quality Index (AQI), with ideal values in the 0-50 range.

Socks: how many and what type of socks are needed to keep your feet at a comfortable temperature. The more socks, the worse the weather. Very useful for students with Raynaud's Syndrome (regretting going to college in Rochester yet?).

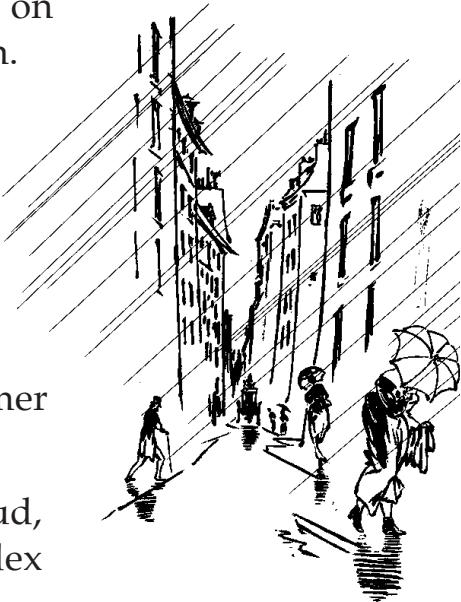

Song Bird Index (SBI): the ratio of birds singing to silence in the mornings. A higher value means more birds, with a maximum ratio of 1.0, and that it's warmer out.

Tour De Cibels: average decibel measurement of tour groups per building. Higher on the weekends with nice weather, especially when there are multiple tour groups circling and more people in each group.

Got it? Here's an example of a typical week:

Monday	Tuesday	Wednesday	Thursday	Friday
 AWS: 3mph Fish: 5 GLE: 10% SBI: 0.8 SnS: 10	 AWS: 4mph Fish: 0 GLE: 80% SBI: 0.6 SnS: 250	 AWS: 4mph Fish: -5 GLE: 99.9% SBI: 0.2 SnS: 500	 AWS: 3.6mph Fish: 1 GLE: 25% SBI: 0.9 SnS: 15	 AWS: 5mph Fish: 0 GLE: 40% SBI: 0.5 SnS: 60

Happy walking! Or wheeling. Or staying home, honestly. 🏠

A Quick Review of Coyote vs. ACME

-by USS N.G King of Hearts

Though I did not grow up in the “Golden Age” of Looney Tunes, I did grow up with many of the reruns of it and related material. I saw reruns of the Animaniacs and Tiny Toons on the Hub, Back in Action on Cartoon Network, and various shorts on Boomerang. I also saw that one sitcom* show back when it was coming out.

Coyote vs. Roadrunner is good.

One of the great things about “formulaic” media familiar with wider audiences is that with the characters and general “plot” established, deeper looks into a character feel more impactful. The formula is recontextualized with the personality and motivations of a character. Wile E. Coyote is one of the greatest examples of this I’ve seen. “Hunting” might be seen as just another occupation by other characters, but we truly see Wile’s philosophy and obsession with this.

And of course, the jokes are good. ACME is a member of the military industrial complex.† There’s a great contrast between the various cartoony gadgets and contraptions and their effects and use by “normal” humans. John Cena has great chemistry with Foghorn. I think the Road Runner could solo the U.S military.

Now there are some occasional bits of 3D animation that bugged me, but if it’s a Looney Tune the mainstream audience recognizes they’ll be animated well. And god Bugs is (2D) animated well. But that might just be me.‡

I feel their handling of the third act misunderstanding could’ve been handled better, but they get it over with relatively quickly and it fits into the overall message.

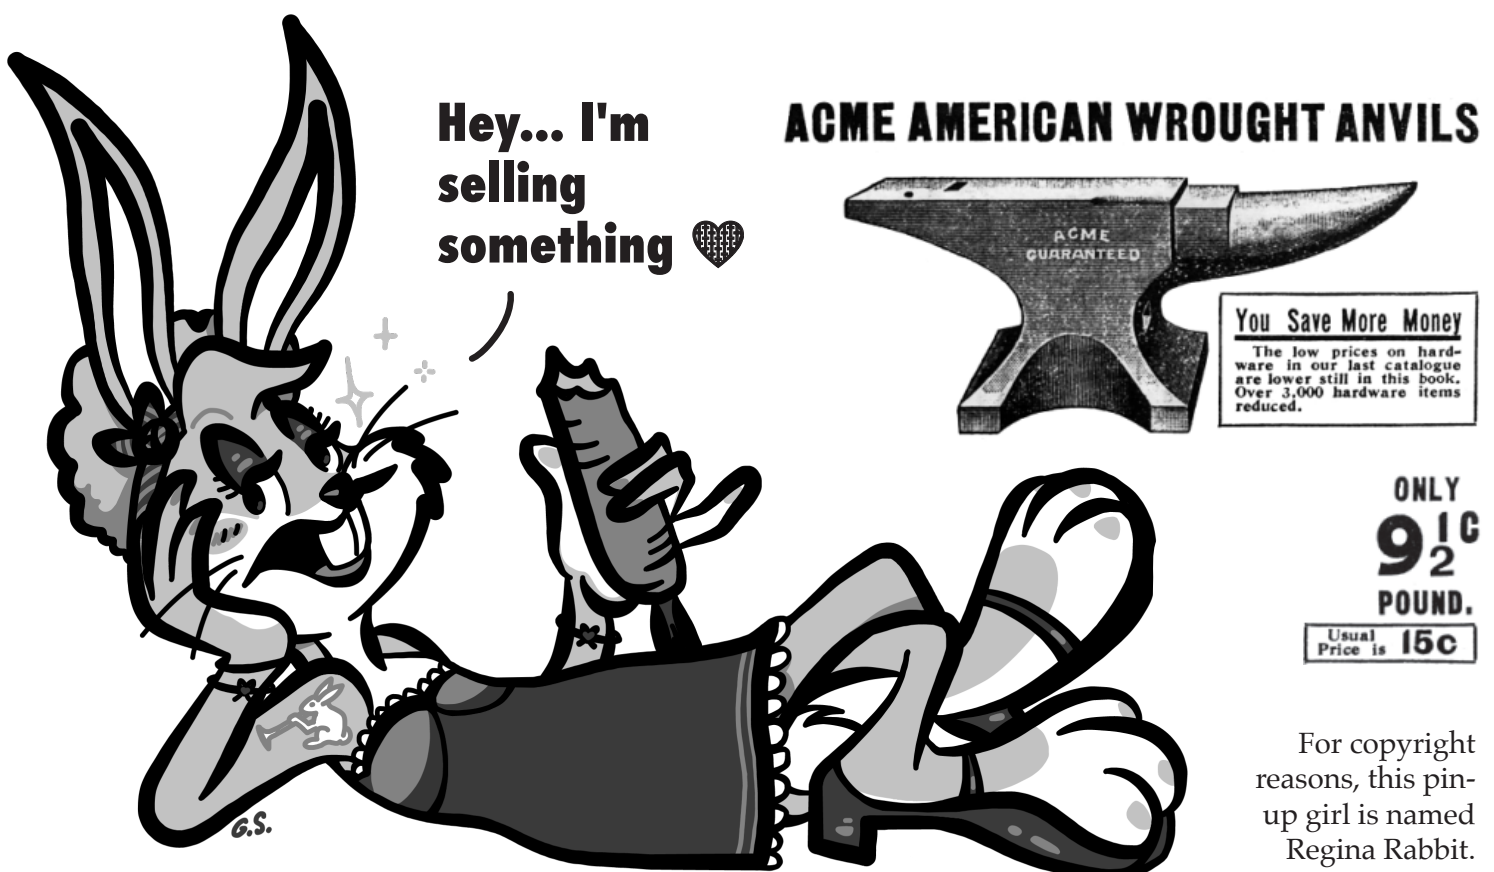

On a side note, I’ve seen so much Looney Tunes yaoi in the past few days. Wile E. Coyote is in a love triangle with Bugs and the Road Runner. The Road Runner is a jealous lover.

Watch the movie to understand that last paragraph a bit. 📺

* I distinctly remember an episode where Bugs won a Nobel Prize but had trouble building a shelf. Very different comedy from the shorts but still quite decent.

† I joke that its “ACME Martin” though I’ve also heard ACME Harris.

‡ I’m not going to say Bugs is a “Hear Me Out.” I (possibly delusionally) think there’s a substantial portion of the population that considers him attractive.

Dear Susan,

Despite hundreds of applications I am still unemployed. My two best prospects are a full-time AI job or working part-time for my second Asian clothing and home goods company. Should I start drinking?

-Steve Jobless

Dear Trent,

Drinking is a despicable habit— I would’ve hoped your mother may have taught you such a lesson at an age much younger than this. When faced with these circumstances, your thoughts shouldn’t immediately jump to such crude solutions. Instead, I urge you to consider some healthier, more natural medications that may also net you a solution to this predicament you find yourself in: in the Gracie’s woods,* you’ll find a portal to another dimension, hidden by a great iron cover. Descend down there, and not only will you find the most beautiful substitute for drinking, but you will also find fantastical employment. Gone will be your woes about Asian clothing and the future of AI— instead, gaze upon the glory of the sludge that shall become your one true mission. 🏠
